

TORTURE BANDIT BURNS MOKENA GIRL

Uses Hot Flat Iron In Attempt To Make Lone Girl Turn Over Money

Miss Ethel Lauffer, 21 year old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Lauffer residing on a farm northeast of Mokena had a terrifying experience with a lone bandit Tuesday afternoon who burned her arm with a hot flat iron when she told him there was no money in the house when the bandit demanded money.

The bandit drove a Ford V8 into the farm yard and then knocked at the door. Miss Lauffer told the robber, a young appearing chap, that there was no money in the house, he refused to believe her and thought if he would torture her she would tell. He seized the hot iron and held it against her arm. When the girl still insisted there was no money in the house, he struck her. She dropped to the floor in a faint. When she came to, the bandit was gone but he did not get any money.

Later when her parents came home, Miss Lauffer told them what transpired during their absence. As there is no phone in the Lauffer home, no help could be summoned. Mr. Lauffer reported the matter to the Will County Sheriff's office, but no trace has been found so far of the torture bandit.

WILL CO., JUDGE SENDS TINLEY YOUTH TO JAIL

Roy Andres, 23 years old, of Tinley Park, who has had a number of brushes with the law, got into trouble Thanksgiving night when he rapped on the wrong door in Tinley at 3 o'clock in the morning. Police Chief C. A. Steinhagen was called and placed Roy in the village jail for the night. Next morning he was turned loose when no charge was pressed against him.

A few days later, however, he was arrested by state highway police on a charge of driving while intoxicated at 159th and Cicero.

Monday his case came up in Chicago, but it so happened that Judge George N. Blatt of Will County was sitting on the bench of this court in Chicago. Roy knew the judge, but family friendship did not deter Judge Blatt from doing his duty. He sentenced Roy to four months in the Cook County jail for driving while intoxicated.

In sentencing the youth Judge Blatt said: "Friend or not, I must do my duty. Your family and mine have been friends for many years, but I think of the lives of other motorists."

Mokena Skating Rink Flooded And In Use

About a year ago an effort was made to have the rink made a WPA project, but this effort met with failure like all the WPA projects in Mokena have, with the exception of one project, that being the extension of the water main system several years ago.

For an instant there was dead silence.

Then—
"Is that you, Elgar?" he cried—and brought my heart into my mouth.

I had meant to approach him forthwith, as Elgar would have approached him, bearing the dressing-case. But now Elgar's failure to answer would tell him that something was wrong, and, once his suspicions were roused, it would be but a matter of moments before he discovered the truth. And my lady was still within range . . .

In a flash I had whipped to where I had laid her down. As I stooped—"Mother of God!" screeched Virgil—and told me he knew we were gone.

My hands encountered nothing. Elizabeth was not there. Being bound, she could not have moved, yet she was not there. For an instant my heart stood still: and then I saw that, because of the darkness, I must be a foot or so left. I felt to the right . . . to the left. I took a pace forward, and stepped on a rotten stick. Its snap declared my presence and I shot a glance at the car. I could, of course, see nothing—except the beam of its lights. Virgil was quiet as death. Death . . .

The man was armed, and Elizabeth lay hereabouts. Hereabouts, but where? I fell on my hands and knees and began to crawl, sweeping the cobbles before me with one of my hands. It was just about here—I knew it. More to the right, perhaps . . . No? Then I must have passed her . . . I made my way back. As I went, I cast to and fro frantically. And then my hand brushed something—the sole of her shoe. My heart leaped up to heaven . . . and then fell down into hell. It was not her shoe. It was that of the man I had killed—from whose side I had set out to find her a moment ago . . .

What that discovery meant took a year from my life: for it meant that before the darkness I was a broken reed, and when I looked to the headlights to get my bearings afresh, their beam was gone.

CHAPTER X

I shook the sweat from my eyes and tried to think what to do. And since my thoughts were frenzied and mostly poisoned by the knowledge of what I ought to have done, I will not recite them here, but will state what, upon reflection—if, indeed, you can give it that name—I set out to do.

I set out to find Percy Virgil, and began to steal forward to where I believed the car was.

Now I had seen Elgar coming because he was silhouetted against the dusk which was keeping the world without. And since I had no wish to offer to Virgil the target which Elgar had offered to me, I dropped to the cobbles and once more began to crawl.

To say that I watched and prayed means nothing at all. I moved like any shadow and listened with all my might. Elizabeth's life might depend on my hearing the enemy move, and I made the slowest progress because my own advance was bound to embarrass my ear. I tried to keep the direction I hoped was right by glancing up at the ridge-poles from time to time, but the court was so broad that they gave me but little help, and after a minute or two I could be sure of nothing except that I was not heading away from the house.

And then I heard Virgil move.

The man was away to my right, and his foot had touched something that stirred—I think, perhaps, a flinder of broken slate.

I shall never forget that almost imperceptible sound that stood up out of the silence to make me a finger-post, for it was so slight, yet commanded the balance of life and death.

With a hammering heart, I turned at once to my right, no longer pausing to listen, but using the utmost care to deny to Virgil the cue he had given to me.

Before I had covered six feet, my outstretched hand met something that did not belong to the court. It might have been a silk tassel . . .

And then I knew I was touching Elizabeth's hair.

I could have wept for relief . . .

Now had I not been sure that Virgil was near, I would have picked her up and run for the woods: but he must have heard me moving and almost at once have seen me against the dusk, and then we should have been at his mercy, because he was armed. And so I determined that we must both stay where we were, unless and until something happened to make it less dangerous to move.

To show her that it was I, I smoothed her hair and held her hands tight in mine. Then, very gently, I eased the knot from her throat and lifted the cord from her neck. Then I began to unfasten the cord which was binding her wrists.

Her blessed hands were free, and her fingers, as though to thank me, were fast about mine, when something moved upon her, directly below my face. It was a sliding movement upon the breast of her frock. As it moved, I felt her stiffen; and so I knew it had nothing to do with her; and when I put down a hand, I found that it was the halter which had been about her neck.

As I touched it, it moved again—and told me the truth.

Percy Virgil was feeling the other end.

For once my brain worked quickly.

Virgil had found the cord and knew what it was. And now he was testing it—to see if both ends were free. If I gradually took the strain, he would believe it still fast to Elizabeth's neck, and would lead himself up to his quarry, hand over hand. Up to his helpless quarry? Up to his doom.

I took the loop in my hand and set out to play my fish . . .

He came with a rush at the last, and, with both of his hands on the cord, he had no chance.

Before the man knew where he was, I had his wrists.

His hands were empty. No doubt, when he found the cord, he had put his pistol away. Be that as it may, he was finished. The snake was scotched.

Of course he fought like a madman. And I—I laughed in his face. It was he that had lent me a strength which was not of this world. I think, if I had pleased, I could have torn his arms from their sockets and tossed them across the court.

I let him fight in silence. And when he was spent, I spoke to Elizabeth, lying two paces away.

"Stay where you are, my lady, and take out your gag."

She answered at once.

"I'm quite all right," she answered. "I'm standing now."

"Then listen," said I. "I want you to leave the court. When you're clear of it, wait for me. I may be a little while, because of this cursed dark."

"Very well," said Elizabeth, shakily.

I heard her turn and start moving towards the mouth of the court.

"Come," said I to Virgil. "Let's look for the sepulcher."

With that, I turned him about, without losing his wrists.

Now I meant to find that well, if it took me an hour and a half; and so, as is often the way, I found it almost at once. At least, I found the car, which was near enough—or, rather, my prisoner found it, by fouling one of its wings. Slowly I steered him round it . . . And so, a few moments later, we stood by the side of the well.

To be sure, I circled this, brushing the parapet's side and counting the three stone statues of men-at-arms—with Virgil always moving before me, because I had hold of his wrists. And then I turned him round and bent him over its edge . . .

"I'm going to kill you," I said, "because I know it's not safe to let you live. If it was safe, I'd thrash you within an inch of your life, and then call in the police and give them the inch that was left. But you have taught me tonight that, while you are still in being, your cousin will always go in danger of death. And so, for once in a way, I'll take a leaf out of your book, and go all lengths."

The man said nothing at all, but I could feel him trembling under my hand.

As I bent him over the depths, I knew he was bracing his knees against the parapet's wall, and God knows I did not blame him, for as I leaned over above him, the awful breath of the water smote my face. It was chill, yet heavy, and reeked of death and decay, and it offered so dreadful an earnest of what was to come that for one instant I flinched from thrusting a fellow creature to such a doom.

I suppose that he felt me falter, for he threw his weight on to his knees in one final, desperate effort to hold himself back.

This, to no avail. For the parapet crumbled before him, and we went down together into the well.

I do not know how far I went down, but I know that my lungs were bursting before I came up, and the first thing I clearly remember was scrambling upon a wall that was coated with slime and finding a crack too small to admit my finger-tips. Then I heard Virgil rise beside me—for, of course, I had let him go—and that restored in an instant the wits I had lost.

I missed his throat in the darkness, but found his wrist; but both of us knew that the odds were now more equal than they had been in the court. With a frightful laugh, he flung an arm round my neck, and I had just time to draw breath before that hellish water once more closed over our heads. I tore away his arm, but before I could seize his throat, his arm was back on my neck. Again I cast it off and forced his wrists together into one hand; but, as we rose again, he locked his legs about mine and threw his weight down. And then I thought I was done, for though at last I had managed to seize his throat, I could not kick us up to the surface, nor spare a hand to deal with the grip of his legs. Unless I could kill him quickly . . . I put forth all my strength, and my fingers sank into his throat as though it were dough.

The blood was pounding in my temples and I felt that my senses were swaying for want of air, when all of a sudden his limbs and his body went slack and I knew I was free . . . And then I was back on the surface and was blowing like any grampus and thanking God for the gift of that tainted air.

Now whether in fact I killed Virgil or whether he drowned himself in an effort to end my life, I never shall know: but I know the man was dead or else had lost his senses and so was presently drowned, for though he rose beside me, he never moved and I think that after a little he sank for good.

Though my case was not so bad, it was evil enough.

I was not wholly exhausted, but the struggle had snapped my strength, and I badly needed the respite I could not take. As was to be expected, the walls of the well were smooth, and though I proved them all round, dislodging slugs and slime and all manner of filth, I could find no sort of handhold to which I could cling. There were cracks in plenty between the blocks of stone of which the walls had been built, for either they had not been cemented, or else the cement was gone: but they were too small for my fingers, and there was nothing else.

All the time my strength was failing, for the deadly chill of the water was laying hold of my muscles and stealing into my blood, and though I did what I could to hold it at bay, the realization that I must very soon sink began, as an ill-mannered bully, to thrust aside my efforts to think what to do to be saved.

To show how desperate I was, I wasted the last of my strength in a frantic effort to find Elizabeth's key—this, with the mad idea of thrusting it into a crack and so creating a projection to which I could cling, and though, I suppose, a more utterly futile design was never conceived, as luck would have it, it actually saved my life.

To get a hand into my pocket was very hard, but the moment my fingers were in, they closed upon something which I had not known was there. And that was the humble tool which once already that night had saved two lives. It was the screw-driver, indeed.

In a twinkling I had the screw-driver out and had pressed its blade into a crack perhaps some eight or ten inches above my head.

Praying that the steel was honest, I gradually let the handle take some of my weight, and when I found that it would hold me, I let it take more. But for the help of the water, it must have bent or broken beneath my weight; but the two together bore me and gave me just that respite my weary muscles required. And, what was still more important, it gave me a definite hope that, though my plight was serious, I might in the end be saved.

And then I heard Elizabeth calling my name . . .

For a moment I thought very fast. Then—

"Lie down," I yelled. "Lie down and crawl slowly forward. I'm down in the well, but lie down. The parapet's gone."

Perhaps two minutes went by: and then a fragment of mortar fell down by my side.

"Stop!" I screamed. "Stay still. You're right on the edge."

Elizabeth answered at once.

"I'm quite all right, my darling. What shall I do?"

I wonder how many women, so placed, would so have comforted themselves. No wailing, no useless inquiries, no bubbling statements of how she came to be there . . . Only the eager question—"What shall I do?"

And I was ready enough. Whilst she was approaching, I had not been wasting my time.

"Find the car," I said. "When you've found her, switch on her lights. Then back her slowly towards the mouth of the court. Her lights will show you the cord that I took from your neck. Take that and the pieces that bound your ankles and wrists. Then back the car again till you see your dressing-case. Put that into the car, and then drive slowly forward until your lights are shining full on the well. When you've done that, come back and I'll tell you some more."

"All right."

How long she was gone, I cannot pretend to say, but she must have been very quick, for though the time passed slowly, at the moment at which I pictured her finding the case, the rim of the well above me grew suddenly bright. Then she must have "dipped" the lamps, for the light came down—to reveal a ladder of dogs driven into the wall of the well.

Some wells have ladders, like that, to the water's edge, and at once I left my handhold and, swimming beneath the ladder, stretched up my hand. But the dogs did not come so low . . . For all that, I was sure that they could not be far away, because a ladder is useless, unless it runs some way down.

As I returned to my screw-driver—

"Yes, Richard?" said Elizabeth, quietly.

"Tie all the cord together and add the strap. Then open the tool-box and take the tool-kit out. If there are tire-levers there, I want them most. If not, the nearest thing to them—tools that will bear my weight. And a hammer, too. Put them into one of your stockings and let them down. We've got to make 38 feet. If you don't think it's long enough, you must add what stockings you have."

It cost me a lot not to add "Be as quick as you can," for my faithful friend was tiring—bending beneath the strain; but such a charge would only have made her frantic, when all the time she was being as quick as she could.

At last a shadow appeared.

"I'm ready, my darling. Which side shall I let it down?"

"D—D'you see the 1—ladder?"

"Yes."

"L—Let it down just clear of the ladder. Which side you 1—like. Don't lean on the parapet, whatever you do."

"All right. I won't."

One Brave Mouse Put Up Good Battle With Two Big Cats and Almost Won

A stray gray mouse fought two large cats to a draw. Six men, a woman and a child will swear to it, asserts a Dowagiac (Mich.) correspondent in the Detroit Free Press.

The battle, they said, lasted three hours and then the contestants had to be separated. The mouse, winded and sorely bruised, was dispatched with a coup de grace. The cats, one weighing 15 pounds and the other seven, were taken home to nurse badly bitten muzzles.

Pat, the larger cat, had cornered the mouse, who is unidentified, and was toying with it as any supercilious cat would. But the mouse, who was not the kind sneered at in the question, "Are we mice or men," didn't play according to the rules.

When the cat cuffed him, the mouse reared on its hind legs, bared its fangs, squeaked defiantly and—eight persons swore to it—charged pell mell into the cat's whiskers.

Each time the cat cuffed him back, but not before the mouse had scratched or bitten the cat on the nose. Bewildered, snarling and spitting, Pat sparred with the mouse alone for 30 minutes. Then the marines, in the shape of Blackie, landed on the mouse from the north while Pat harassed him from the south.

The cats batted the mouse between them, but with the agility of a Tunney he held the cuffing to a minimum by nipping two astonished noses. After three hours without a rest period, the mouse, still valiant, met a hero's death under a club wielded by a spectator.

"End of the Trail"

The life-size statue, "End of the Trail," made by James Earle Fraser, and awarded the gold medal at the Panama-Pacific International exposition in 1915 has been described as follows: "The end of the trail. The point of the warrior's spear has sunk to the ground. Absolute dejection, inconceivable weariness, complete exhaustion and hopeless despair are shown in every line and curve of the sculptured figures of the Indian and his tottering horse. The sufferings of generations, the hopeless struggles of four centuries, and the final fate of the proud race that once claimed a continent for its own, can be read at a glance, and coming generations of the conquering race will stand before this remarkable creation of Fraser's genius and be moved to pity and compassion."

HOW TO SEW

by Ruth Wyeth Spears

Money making ideas for Christmas.

AN INTERESTING letter this morning says, "Our church bazaar is over and in winding up the last details and balancing my accounts I feel that I would be neglecting something if I did not express my appreciation for your Sewing Book No. 2, Gifts, Novelties and Embroidery. We found many ideas in it that were real money makers. Our annual Christmas sale is now in course of preparation. Could you publish some new ideas for toys in the paper soon?"

Unusually attractive toys may be made quickly and at little cost from cheap cotton stockings. This demure yellowish tan kitten with bright red or blue ribbon is made from a stocking leg. The secret of giving toys of this type character is in making the stuffing firm and tight. Cotton or small pieces of clean, soft rags may be used. Push the stuffing firmly in place with a blunt stick.

Complete directions for cutting and making the body are given here. For the tail, cut a piece 6 inches long and 2 inches wide. Stitch the lengthwise edges together, tapering toward the end, then turn right side out. Stuff and sew firmly in place. It is easy to draw the face. Notice in the sketch how the eyelids curve, the shape of the mouth and how the whiskers slant.

Either wool yarn or mercerized cotton embroidery thread may be used—black or brown for the eyes and whiskers and red for the mouth. Be sure to save the scraps of stocking material left from the kitten. We will make a doll out of them later. If you are not ready to make Christmas toys now, clip and save this lesson as it is not contained in either of the books offered below.

NOTE: Are you ready for Christmas? Birthdays? And the next church bazaar? Do you turn time into money with things to sell? Mrs. Spears' Sewing Book 2 has helped thousands of women. If your home is your hobby you will also want Book 1—SEWING, for the Home Decorator. Order by number enclosing 25 cents for each book. If you order both books, quilt leaflet with 36 different stitches will be included free. Address Mrs. Spears, 210 S. Desplaines St., Chicago, Ill.

"POOR TRUST IS DEAD—BAD PAY KILLED HIM"

This sign with picture of "doggie," gone where all "doggies" go, hanging on the wall of a small store in a little North Carolina town which was plenty years ago, was my first squint at the hint to pay cash. Some need a hint while others need a kick to make good their I. O. U's. The owner of that North Carolina store the kids called "OLD MAN CASH." What the grown-ups called him, I dunno.

It was said that he was a mind reader because he was always able to arrange to be at the spot where you had to look at that sign, and him, too, when you wanted credit. His cold stare and that sign caused stuttering of "the promise to pay tomorrow." It was told that some could not even utter the stutter when facing him and his sign.

In later years, after his retirement, speaking of his experience, he said, "There was a time when I was a Santa Claus and some folks seemed to think every day was December twenty-fifth, and no week had a pay day and no month, a first. It was then I decided to change my store habits and if possible the habits of some of my towns-people."

After thinking things over awhile, I made up my mind to advertise. I reasoned it out that a general alarm in the WEEKLY, the only paper in town, to tell about my store, the goods and the new policy of paying, would hit everybody and it would help me save shame-faces—some might feel sheepish while reading my advertisements and have a heart.

I got interested in advertising. I found other people, some of them my customers, read advertisements, so I helped it along the best I knew how. I put gingersnap words in my advertisements and some humor, and that's how the idea came for the POOR TRUST IS DEAD sign.

I also found that good-name goods had repeat sales and that started me concentrating on staples with the result that fussiness over what kind, no longer confused or irked. Dilly-dally selling efforts, wasting time and costing money passed out.

Customers bought baking powder, soda, flour, soap and other articles bearing identification marks. Kids called them pictures. Products put up in neat, convenient, honest weight and measured cartons, boxes, bottles and cans. What an improvement in business and the dispositions of the customers. I even improved with conditions so greatly changed for the better.

Mail Order Denture Business Victorious In Court Decision

False teeth may be measured and sold by mail as readily as in a dentist's chair, according to a court ruling, says a recent news item in the Chicago Daily Tribune.

The United States Dental Company of Chicago reports that its business both in the United States and outside is growing very rapidly; that its quick, easy, economical way of fitting and constructing dentures from finest materials, with expert craftsmanship, at very low prices, is an achievement of this age. Thousands of grateful letters in its files from satisfied customers all over the country testify to this.

This is a distinctly worthy service to people who work in the fields, mountains, or other places where it is inconvenient for them to find local dentists to make good teeth for them at low prices. Adv.

A Three Days' Cough Is Your Danger Signal

No matter how many medicines you have tried for your common cough, chest cold, or bronchial irritation, you may get relief now with Creomulsion. Serious trouble may be brewing and you cannot afford to take a chance with any remedy less potent than Creomulsion, which goes right to the seat of the trouble and aids nature to soothe and heal the inflamed mucous membranes and to loosen and expel germ-laden phlegm.

Even if other remedies have failed, don't be discouraged, try Creomulsion. Your druggist is authorized to refund your money if you are not thoroughly satisfied with the benefits obtained. Creomulsion is one word, ask for it plainly, see that the name on the bottle is Creomulsion, and you'll get the genuine product and the relief you want. (Adv.)

Patriotism does not consist in waving banners, or wearing unidenouncing other lands, or waxing eloquent about God's own country.

It consists rather in exemplifying in the twentieth century, the ancient truth that "righteousness exalteth a people."

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE CHURCHES

"Ancient and Modern Necromancy,
Alas Mesmerism and Hypnotism, Denounced," was the subject of the Lesson-Sermon in all Churches of Christ, Scientist, on Sunday, November 27.

The Golden Text was, "If God be for us, who can be against us?"
(Romans 8:31).

Among the citations which comprised the Lesson-Sermon was the following from the Bible: "Thus saith the Lord, thy Redeemer, the Holy One of Israel; I am the Lord thy God that teacheth thee by the way that thou shouldest go. O that thou hadst hearkened to my commandments! then had thy peace been as a river, and thy righteousness as the waves of the sea" (Isaiah 48:17 18).

The Lesson-Sermon also included the following passages from the Christian Science textbook,
"Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy:
"Animal magnetism has no scientific foundation, for God governs all that is real, harmonious, and eternal, and His power is neither animal nor human. Its basis being a belief and this belief animal, in Science animal magnetism, mesmerism, or hypnotism is a mere negation, possessing neither intelligence, power, nor reality, and in sense it is an unreal concept of the so-called mortal mind"
(p. 102).

New Faces At Washington

By RAYMOND PITCAIRN

As a result of the recent elections, many new faces will appear when Congress next meets in Washington.

And, as another result, a somewhat different concept of the legislator's responsibility to his constituents may also be evident.

For again the people have spoken—expressing by their ballots approval of the pledges, the promises and the appeals hurled at them by the successful candidates in the course of campaign oratory.

But to neither the candidate nor the voter should the end of the election campaign mean the end of responsibility for the welfare of the nation and its people. Their responsibility grows instead, as the time comes to make those pledges good.

In every state citizens have been promised faithful representation and a sincere regard for their interests by the candidates in whom they have voted confidence. This should mean just what it says.

It should mean that the elected officeholder thinks of his constituents first, and of his political aspirations second.

It should mean that he considers himself the servant of the people, rather than the puppet of a party leader, waiting only for the tug of political strings.

It should mean that he realizes the money he votes for reckless expenditure by politicians and bureaucrats is the people's money—earned and supplied by them through their labors, their sacrifices and their savings.

These are things which every public servant knows. But sometimes, after Election Day, he forgets his constituents. Sometimes the urgent orders of political overlords seem to drown out the just expectations of the men and women he was chosen to represent. That is why frequent reminders of his campaign promises to the folks back home are so important.

For the office-holder to remember and fulfill his pledges is, in the long run, good politics.

And for constituents to hold him to that responsibility is not only good citizenship—under our system of Government by the People, it is sound Americanism.

Bugle Calls

By Zeb Potter

On the front page of the last issue of the News-Bulletin a cartoon shows Uncle Sam giving thanks before a turkey. The other parts of the meal in the drawing represent our civil liberties; the right of free assembly, free press, and free speech, and freedom of worship.

With the rise of dictator ruled nations in Europe in which these rights are "squashed" our interest in these principles of democracy should not lag.

Hitler says that a democracy is his enemy. His way of government, he claims is the best. His set-up goes back to the philosophical teachings of Nietzsche: "by nature all men are unequal; that morality is the invention of the weak to limit and deter the strong; that power is the supreme virtue and supreme desire of man; and that all forms of government the wisest and most natural is aristocracy."

Stop and think, by free thinking and free speech, man has raised himself from the barbarian ages.

The English people armed with scythes had to go after their overlords to wrest these rights from them. The American people rejected the Constitution ten times until George Washington wisely wrote these rights into the fundamental law of our land.

Last week in Chicago, a German-American Bund meeting was broken up by people opposed to Hitler. An action such as this makes martyrs out of the Nazis and gives a better spread to their propaganda. To curb Hitler, ignore Hitler in this country.

A young Polish Jew in Paris killed an official of Hitler's government. This gave the Nazis an excuse to punish severely the German Jews. Twenty years ago we went to war to make the world safe for Democracy. Today we must look to our own democracy to save it.

I suggest take the history book and re-read the Bill of Rights in the American Constitution. We must cherish and protect those rights more than ever in the light of world events.

The Mokena Civic Association will give a Christmas party. Fine job of making living more interesting. This club is doing a remarkable thing in Mokena. The children this winter will enjoy a skating rink built by the club.

A passing motor car broke a hitch hiker's thumb. How about thumbs down on hitch-hiking? Now that the election is over, the talk around Joliet is that there will be some surprise appointments made by the Republicans for the court house jobs. Politics at best is like a horse race. Try and pick a winner consistently. It can't be done.

Some day, in this country, to qualify for public office, a man must have a certain amount of training and education. Perhaps, then we shall have a more efficient administration of our public affairs.

I still say that the best government exists in our small town and villages, since the officials are more closely watched by the people. The people in rural communities have a more intense interest in local government than their city brothers. That's all this week.

ZEB POTTER.

ORLAND PARK HIGH SCHOOL NEWS.

The Thanksgiving program was very successful. About a dozen ladies from town attended. The teachers and students appreciated their interest in their program.

Reviews and six weeks tests are being given. Report cards will be issued next week.

The girls in Sewing class have begun making Christmas gifts.

The high school boys will play basket ball at Mokena this Friday night at 8:30. Everyone should attend if they possibly can. Come out and support the team.

Parents are urged to keep their children at home until 8:40 a. m. and 12:40 p. m., as the patrol boys will not be on duty until that time. The weather is too cold for the boys to stand outside any earlier. Children arriving before 8:40 will cross the street at their own risk.

PARENTS—Be sure to sign the report card which your boy or girl will bring home next week. Ask him or her for it. Be sure you see it. It is the school's report to you on the progress of your boy or girl.

The high school boys are playing a new game during recreation period called touch ball; the game is a combination of soccer, football and basketball, and is enjoyed very much. They are also playing association football, a kicking game and basketball.

The girls are playing softball. We are looking forward to skating as soon as the ice gets hard.

A $38,000,000,000 Threat

By RAYMOND PITCAIRN

Many noted commentators on public affairs have observed in the outcome of the recent elections a significant fact.

They have seen in the attitude expressed at the polls impressive evidence that the American people are determined to halt the mounting toll of extravagance and public debt charged against the workers' earnings and savings during the past few years.

This is a natural and logical conclusion. So serious, in fact, has the threat become that today the federal debt alone amounts to $38,000,000,000—an average of $300 charged against every man, woman and child in the country; $1200 against every family.

Nor is that all. In addition to the federal debt, the politicians have piled up state and local debts amounting to $19,000,000,000 more—making a total public debt of about $57,000,000,000, an average of approximately $1800 per family.

And that doesn't include the interest! Who is going to pay those bills? The answer is obvious.

Not the politicians who ran them up, but the people—from the fruits of whose labor all public money is collected! Taxes, as everyone knows, constitute the source of government funds—and all taxes, whether paid directly or indirectly, must come out of the earnings and savings of the people.

Today the people have shown that they realize this fact. They have demonstrated that they want the politicians to realize it too.

And if their demands are heeded—if the new Congress accepts its responsibility to put the interests of constituents and nation above those of party and faction—America can look forward with revived hope to the progress and recovery which her rich natural resources, and the intelligence and energy of her people, can and should assure.

Power of Prayer
Cited By Dr.
Walter A. Maier

"Churches on their knees in prayer can accomplish vastly more than churches busy with social and political programs," Dr. Walter A. Maier said in his coast-to-coast Lutheran Hour broadcast.

Dr. Maier cited the example of George Muller of Bristol, England, as proof of the power of Christian petition. As a young pastor, he said, Muller set himself the task of showing that God answers prayer. He established and maintained an orphanage without asking any individuals for help, simply relying on the ability of God to answer his requests. Without making public or private appeals but simply by praying confidently and continually, Muller received contributions from various sources. Within a few years more than $400,000.00 had been contributed as the result of his prayers. By 1875 the number of orphans under his care had increased to more than 2,000, and all these were supported without an organization without a committee, simply by the prayers of a man who devoted his life to demonstrating that God keeps his word. Dr. Maier asserted that many of the tragedies of failure, retrenchment and deficits in modern church life are to be traced to "anemic prayer life" and could be obviated by a new sincerity in church prayers.

Enumerating the chief factors which are responsible for unanswered petitions, Dr. Maier denounced prayer without faith, the insincere movement of the lips; prayer without love, the asking forgiveness of God while maintaining a spirit of hate-filled revenge; prayer without hope, the skeptical attitude which tries prayer merely to see what may happen; prayer without knowledge, the impulsive asking of things which, if granted, would prove destructive; and prayer without Christ.

Poultry Theft
Losses Heavier
Than Bank Thefts

Losses from poultry thefts in Illinois amounting to more than three times the money stolen in bank robberies in the entire United States will be largely eliminated as a result of the enactment of "The Illinois Truck Act" prepared by the Uniform Motor Vehicle Laws Commission for introduction in the Illinois Legislature, according to Rep. F. W. Lewis, Robinson, a member of the Commission, speaking before the Rotary Club here last night.

"Crime prevention and the apprehension of criminals in our major cities have reached such a high development that organized bands of thieves have been driven out to prey upon the unprotected rural sections of our state," Lewis said. "The use of high speed trucks and fast cars makes capture of these criminals by local sheriffs or police officers extremely difficult."

"It is practically impossible for the limited forces of sheriffs offices and other rural police officers to efficiently patrol the 231,312 farms in Illinois. More than three quarters of a billion dollars of live stock, poultry and other personal property is thus exposed to the depredations of these organized bands of criminals who operate with little fear of detection.

"The losses resulting from poultry stolen from Illinois farms during 1931 amounted to $1,486,842.21," Lewis said. "This is more than three times the losses in the 120 banks which were held up in the entire United States with a total loss of $478,457.00. If we included live-stock and other rural thefts the total probably would be at least a million dollars more."

"The proposed truck regulatory law prepared by the Uniform Motor Vehicle Laws Commission for introduction in the January session of the Illinois Legislature has as its primary purposes safety of operation, financial responsibility and the prevention of rural theft," Lewis continued. "Under this law every truck owner will be required to paint upon the side of each truck his name, address and a special number assigned to him by the Department of Public Works and Buildings."

"This identification which can not be covered or switched as can a license plate, coupled with the use of a simple form of bill of lading or bill of sale, will enable the police to stop trucks at random and ascertain where the trucker picked up his load. The hazards of detection will be so great that the thieves will not try such an impossible game, but will be driven out of the state to avoid almost certain apprehension."

"Extreme care has been exercised in the preparation of this proposed law to avoid placing any undue burden upon the small truck operator or the shipper or consumer," Lewis said. "We held forty-two public hearings and spent more than a year in study and investigations in obtaining information upon which to base this regulation. Under this law there will be no more monopolies controlling our public highways to the exclusion of the private carrier and the small trucker."

The other members of the Commission, in addition to Representative F. W. Lewis, are Lieutenant-Governor John Steele, McLeansboro; Louie E. Lewis, Christopher, Speaker House of Representatives and State Treasurer elect, Senators, John W. Fribley, Pana; Simon E. Lantz, Congerville; George M. Maypole, and Harold G. Ward of Chicago; Representatives James P. Boyle, Chicago; Thomas A. Brennan, Rock Island; and David Hunter Jr., Rockford; Senator Louis J. Menges, East St. Louis, Chairman; Representative G. J. Bauer, Effingham, Vice-Chairman; and Charles F. Mansfield, Springfield, Secretary.

Treat Promised
Wrestling Fans

The Wrestling fans of Joliet and Will County will be glad to know that promoter Walter Shaughnessy has signed the "Black Panther" or Jack Claybourn as he was christened, for an appearance in his Joliet arena next Thursday night. Claybourn was a mighty popular wrestler in Joliet last season. He took on the roughest and the toughest of the grapplers and did quite well for himself in the line of victories. The fans have been asking for the appearance of this colored boy for some time and Shaughnessy is bringing him in from Detroit to appear here Thursday. Claybourn has been wrestling in the outdoor spots of Columbus, Ohio, Detroit and New York City during the summer season. This Black Panther is called the Joe Lewis of the wrestling world and the big names have been sidestepping him for a year. It is rumored they are afraid that there will be a colored heavyweight champion wrestler too.

Claybourn is matched with Abe Rothberg a New York Jewish lad who has plenty on the ball too. Rothberg bars nothing when he gets in the ring and asks no favors from an opponent either. He is one tough boy.

The supporting card to this one hour match will find three fast and furious matches. Rufus Johnson, another colored lad will be pitted against the Red Ace in the semi-Windup spot. Rufus is a different kind wrestler than Claybourn. He goes in for the unruly tactics and is not popular. The main preliminary will find Jack Conley the Boston fishman against the new French sensation, Pierre LaBelle and the opener brings Frankie Hart and Rudy Kay together for thirty minutes.

This show is tops in wrestling entertainment Shaughnessy claims and the reserved seats are going to be in great demand. They will go on sale earlier than usual on Monday and they may be obtained at The Hollywood Luncheonette, John McCarty's and at John McGuire's Jewelry Store.

The opener will take place at 8 p. m., at the Chamber of Commerce arena in Joliet.

Frigidaire Practical
Christmas Gift

Christmas will soon be here. The day to which the world looks forward throughout the rest of the year is near at hand, and with it comes the spirit of peace on earth and good will to fellow mankind. But when the children are nestled all snug in their beds and visions of sugar plums dance thru their heads", there are those who must think of providing "sugar plums" as well as other gifts that bring happiness on this holiday of holidays.

When safety in the home means happiness, safety in health should be the first consideration when buying presents. For this reason the name of Frigidaire electric refrigerators should head all other items on the list when buying a present for the home. It is a necessary unit in the up-to-date kitchen of today and is a safeguard to health that cannot afford to be overlooked.

"The new Frigidaire", according to Clarence Beagley, local dealer, "is the economical and safe answer to food protection the year round. It not only assures safekeeping of food but it is an economical guarantee for the monthly budget where every cent counts. This is due in part to the low initial cost of the new Frigidaire and even more so to the low maintenance cost."

What better answer could there be to the ever present problem of "what to give for Xmas" than a Frigidaire. It is a present which will not be forgotten with the passing of Christmas Day, but rather one which will be forever remembered for the part it plays in the household. If a home is without one, now is the time to kill two birds with one stone by getting one. A beautiful Christmas present is combined with a protective health measure which insures happiness the other 364 days of the year.

Hospital Care

Full payment of all the hospital bills of the entire family was announced today by Plan for Hospital Care, not-for-profit hospital care insurance plan. Until now it has paid the full bill for the employed person only, and half the bills of families. Extension of the Plan to include full payment of the rest of the family's bills was a fulfillment of the promise of the Plan to the community that surpluses and reserves would be used to give greater benefits.

An employed person may have, not only all of his own hospital bills paid, but also those of his husband or wife and all children for the rate of two dollars a month. For the individual employed person the rate remains eighty cents a month. For husband or wife without and children the rate is $1.50 a month.

Employees and their families of twenty-four firms have joined the plan. They are: National Federation of Federal Employees, Chicago Relief Adm., Woodlawn Dist., Leyden Motor Coach Co., Fenger High school, Parker high school, Standard Material Co., Newspaper Carriers Assn., The Aridor Co., R. Berry Roofing Co., Krim-Ko Co., United Autographic Register Co., The Vicking Corp., Cook school, Fulton school, Lindbloom high school, Loring school, McKay school, Nightingale school, Oglesby school, Sawyer ave. School, Argo Community high school, Morgan Park Military Academy, Erwin O. Freund.

All members of the Plan may use any of the seventy-one approved Plan hospitals. Evangelical, Holy Cross, Little Company of Mary, Roseland Community, St. Bernard's, Bethany, Garfield Park Community, Hospital of St. Anthony de Padua, Mother Cabrini Memorial, Mt. Sinai and St. Charles are among the 71.

According to Perry Addleman, executive director of the Plan, more than 5,000 of its 70,000 members have already been hospital patients, using nearly 40,000 days of hospital care. Since January 1, 1937 when it began to operate, the Plan has paid out or set aside for hospital care $250,000.

"Many persons", Mr. Addleman stated, "have assumed that it is necessary to belong to a large company to join Plan for Hospital Care. This is not true."

"In any firm where there are five or more employees including the employer, a group may be formed. If there are two, three or four employees in a firm or store, they may join together and form a group with other offices, firms or stores. That is, four stores employing respectively four, three, two and two employees, each could make a group. The employer should be counted too."

GETTYSBURG ADDRESS NOW 75 YEARS OLD

The Gettysburg Address in Lincoln's Own Handwriting

SEVENTY-FIVE years ago—on November 19, 1863—Abraham Lincoln stepped forward on the speakers' platform at Gettysburg and delivered the Gettysburg Address. This three-minute talk is widely recognized as the masterpiece of modern English eloquence.

At least five different versions of the Gettysburg Address were written or spoken by Lincoln, according to Dr. L. A. Warren, director of the Lincoln National Life Insurance Company's Lincoln Museum in Fort Wayne, Indiana. No less than three such versions were written after the dedication ceremonies when Edward Everett, George Bancroft, and probably a few others, requested copies. The writing Lincoln prepared for Everett and the two copies he wrote for Bancroft have been preserved. It is the final Bancroft copy, reproduced here in Lincoln's own handwriting, which has become known as the authentic Gettysburg Address.

HOUSEHOLD
QUESTIONS

Raisins and Nuts in Cakes.—If you will roll nut meats in flour before adding to the cake mixture, nuts will not fall to bottom of cake. This should also be done when raisins are used in cakes.

Preserving Linoleum.—To keep linoleum in good condition, rub it with linseed oil once or twice a year, during spring and fall house cleaning.

Lengthening Blankets.—Blankets that are too short can be lengthened by sewing on one end a strip of unbleached muslin or of some other firm and easily washed material.

Save Climbing Stairs.—A small table or shelf placed at the foot of the stairs and another at the head will save endless trips up and down. Articles intended to be taken up or down, as the case may be, can be placed on the table and then taken up in one trip.

Time to Wax Floors.—Wax finishes on floors should be renewed every four to six months, depending on the amount of wear on the floor.

Heat Before Polishing.—Knives will brighten quickly if heated before being polished. Dip them in a basin of boiling water and rub each blade before it cools.

Wait, Mother—
Ask Your Doctor First

Never give your children unknown "Bargain" remedies to take unless you ask your doctor.

A mother may save a few pennies giving her children unknown preparations. But a child's life is precious beyond pennies. So—ask your doctor before you give any remedy you don't know all about.

And when giving the common children's remedy, milk of magnesia, always ask for "Phillips' Milk of Magnesia."

Because for three generations Phillips' has been favored by many physicians as a standard, reliable and proved preparation—marvelously gentle for youngsters.

Many children like Phillips' in the newer form—tiny peppermint-flavored tablets that chew like candy. Each tablet contains the equivalent of one teaspoonful of the liquid Phillips'. 25¢ for a big box.

A bottle of Phillips' liquid Milk of Magnesia costs but 25¢. So—anyone can afford the genuine. Careful mothers ask for it by its full name "Phillips' Milk of Magnesia."

Lesson for December 4

THE SIN OF LYING

LESSON TEXT—Exodus 20:16; John 8:42-47; Ephesians 4:25.
GOLDEN TEXT—Behold, thou desirest truth in the inward parts.—Psalm 51:6.

Lesson subjects and Scripture texts selected and copyrighted by International Council of Religious Education; used by permission.

"God is truth. The word truth describes the very nature of God. Lying, therefore, reveals a character opposite from God. Satan is a liar. He was a liar from the beginning and is spiritually the father of all liars. A lie does not necessarily have to be an untruth. A statement of a truth may be a lie if its purpose is to deceive. A half truth may be the worst kind of a lie. Satan's lies . . . are usually mixed with truth." Consider "modernism, which has enough truth in it to make it accepted by thousands of people, but sufficient error to deprive it of any power to save souls" (L. D. Higley).

I. Forbidden to Lie (Exod. 20:16). This commandment specifically forbids perjury, which is one of the worst forms of lying, because it may result in the forfeiture of the very life of a fellow being. It is obvious, however, that it includes all forms of lying, whether in business, in social contacts, in the home, or in the church. We might do well to consider what the Bible has to say about whisperers, talebearers, backbiters, and others (see Lev. 19:6; II Cor. 12:20). A man's reputation may be as easily ruined by a whispered lie over the back fence or the luncheon table as by formal perjury in the courtroom. "Thou shalt not bear false witness" at any time, anywhere, or in any way.

II. Fountain of Lies (Matt. 15:19, 20).

Our constant concern for the body that it may be healthy, clean, and well groomed is commendable up to the point where it becomes an attempt to "glorify" the flesh. But after all, the body is not the most important thing. The heart is what makes a man (read Matt. 15:7-11). But what comes out of man's unregenerate heart? What a horrible catalogue we read in verse 19! It is not what a man eats or what he wears that makes him, but what is in his heart. How foolish then to hope to redeem humanity by improving housing, having better schools and bigger playgrounds. All these are desirable, but the one thing needful is that man's heart be washed in the blood of the Lord Jesus Christ, that he be born again.

III. Father of Lies (John 8:42-47).

Liars had better consider their "family tree" and see how they like their spiritual father. He is lustful, murderous, and there is no truth in him (v. 44). If you belong to that family would you not like to change families and be born into God's family.

As we have already suggested, the prize lie of Satan is modern religious liberalism. We quote again from Mr. Higley: "The first lie was told by Satan and it brought about the fall of the human race. The last lie . . . by Satan is being told even now . . . in the form of modernism, that makes the Church impotent even to save its own people." Let us have no part in putting forward this falsehood.

Note that in verses 45-47 Jesus challenges His enemies to convict Him of sin or of falsehood. No one has ever been able to meet that challenge. Even those who deny His Godhood and Saviourhood speak swelling words of commendation of His pure life and exalted moral teaching. If then He told the truth about other things, surely He spoke the truth about Himself. The claims He made for Himself as the Son of God and the Saviour of the world are plain and unmistakable. If we deny them we either make Jesus a liar, or we lie ourselves, and it is obvious that the latter is the case.

IV. Forsaking of Lies (Eph. 4:25).

"Wherefore" refers us back to the preceding verses where we are told how, as Christians, we have put off the life of the "old man" (v. 22) and put on the "new man"; therefore we are to live in true holiness. But evidently the Ephesian Christians still fell into their old heathen habits of lying. Would that the tendency had died out with the early Church, but as a matter of fact, it seems to have become aggravated as the years have come and gone.

Being in Christ—members of His body and thus united to one another in Him—should make us scrupulously truthful toward all men. Let us—which means you and me—scrutinize every relationship of life and be sure that we have not by word, act, or inference told lies. Think carefully of your family life, your church life, your community life. Deal with such practical things as grocery bills, taxes, tendencies to gossip. We preachers need to consider our sermons. Are they true to God's Word? Are they honestly prepared? Do we "stretch" our illustrations to make them effective? Surely all of us who bear the name of Christ must put away every form of falsehood.

For Real Christmas Spirit
Take the Youngsters Shopping

In Santa Claus' court at one of America's big department stores a fast photographer caught these candid shots of youthful shoppers going about their business. They're pictures you might find in any store in the country this time of the year.

Santa Won't Miss
'Farthest North'
U. S. Community

PENASSE, MINN. — Youngsters living in this isolated community are quite confident Santa Claus won't pass them by this Christmas. Penasse, you see, is St. Nicholas' first stop in the United States, and the farthest north point in the nation. If he gets past the customs officials, St. Nick has to visit Penasse.

The bewhiskered gentleman abandons his reindeer before he reaches Penasse each year, because the deep snow usually hampers even those sturdy steeds. He travels by ski-equipped airplane, flown to the isolated village twice each week from Warroad.

Penasse's only other visitor in the winter is Indiana Pete, a trapper living on a nearby island in the Lake of the Woods. The postmistress is Miss Helen Arnold, twenty-two, who admits business isn't very rushing—even at Christmas time.

Ointment Named in Bible
Is Extracted from Shrub
Native to United States

America shares with the Holy Land the small plant from which comes the oil that recalls to mind events of 19 centuries ago, when the glories of the first Christmas eve were revealed to shepherds on Bethlehem's hills.

From this plant, which abounds in Minnesota's north woods and other places in the United States, is taken spikenard, highly-perfumed ointment referred to in the King James version of the Bible as used to anoint the feet of Jesus.

So this small, unassuming plant played a small part in events which gave us Christmas, most cheerful holiday of nations.

Northern Outposts Await Planes With Christmas Parcels

EDMONTON, ALBERTA.—Almost forgotten by millions of Canadian and American Christmas celebrants are residents of far-flung outposts of the Canadian northwest territories. Each year they look forward to a merry Christmas—if the weather is good and parcels arrive by plane in time for the annual celebration.

Christmas express and provisions usually reach Adkavik, 1,480 miles northwest of Edmonton, a few days before Christmas. Another far-away place is Coppermine, 1,100 miles north of Edmonton on Coronation gulf. Pilot Marlowe Kennedy makes the trip to that outpost from Port Radium on Great Bear lake.

But even though Christmas provisions don't come through by airplane, residents of the arctic wastelands are brought to civilization's very door each Yuletide through the magic of radio.

Community Christmas Trees
In many American communities "civic" Christmas trees are erected each December in the main square or street and the town's Yule activities center there. Many communities also string colored lights along the streets during the season to accentuate the holiday spirit. Usually the lighting of the community tree or the special street lights is accompanied by a ceremony inaugurating the Christmas shopping season. Lights are removed immediately after New Year's Day.

Fateful
Meeting

By KATHRINE EDELMAN

IN THE gray dusk of a December afternoon the slowly moving figure seemed almost a part of the landscape. Half a dozen cars whizzed by but no one stopped to offer him a lift or ask where he was going. If the Spirit of Christmas, of kindness, was abroad, it was surely passing him up.

Ten minutes more of plodding through the chill, darkening air, and another car came roaring down the road, passing him by as the others had done. The grim lines around his mouth grew deeper, then he heard a loud grinding of brakes.

"Almost passed you up," a gay voice cried.

"Pretty fine of you to stop for an old man." He shuffled into the vacant seat as he spoke.

"Oh, that's nothing," the gay voice was a bit embarrassed. "But I did almost pass you up. With this Christmas business, and the rush and hurry, one could pass up their own mother."

"I like to hear you say that. It's what I've always believed. The fact is, I was making a bit of a test to-day—had a bet with a friend about it. What's your name?"

"The name is Tod Jenkins. I'm headed for St. Louis—going home to spend Christmas with mother. I graduated in engineering last June."

"An interesting story." Tod turned to look at the old man as he spoke. He almost swung the car off the slab. "Why—why you look years and years younger than I thought!"

A hearty laugh sounded against the sharply rising wind. The man was speaking again. "I'm not so old, Tod," he said slowly. "I'm a long way from the old fellow you were kind enough to pick up. Yesterday we had an argument at the club. I made a bet with a fellow that I wouldn't have to walk an hour before I would find the Spirit of Christmas. It was rather a crazy thing to do, but I happen to be rather an eccentric scientist. My name is Perry Birch."

"Perry Birch!" Tod's eyes widened in astonishment, and his foot went off the accelerator, bringing the car almost to a standstill before he went on. "Why—why," he stammered, "I've been wanting to meet you all my life. I've read everything you've written—studied your methods and work for years. In fact, his voice grew more embarrassed, "I've been hoping that some day I might follow in your footsteps. The biggest wish of my life is to become a scientist like you!"

Santa Claus of the Air
BOSTON.—New England has an aerial Santa Claus in the person of Capt. William H. Wincapaw, who annually flies from West Quoddy Head to New York city, dropping Christmas packages to isolated lighthouse keepers en route. Wincapaw started the service 10 years ago and is now aided by his son, Bill Jr., who handles "target work" over each lighthouse. The captain dives low over the lonely outpost and yells, "Let 'er go!" and young Bill hurls the bundle.

BOB looked at her with troubled eyes. "Well, it's come, Ellen." He twirled a letter in his hand. She smiled at his gloomy face. "What has?"

He shook the letter. "Remember, I told you—when you marry me, you take Dad in the bargain; and believe me, he is a fearful old crab."

"Why, dear, what a way to talk of your father!" she said a bit shocked.

"But that's what he is! I love him in spite of it, but I hate to tangle you up with him. He wants me to bring you out to the house, probably to decide whether you will make a fit wife for me or not. It's none of his business, but it's very much his way. Now, will you go?"

"Why, of course, I'll go," she said laughing.

Ellen in the days following before their departure had her moments of serious doubt and worry. Suppose Bob's father should take a dislike to her? The real reason for Bob's worry was his fear that the father he really loved would not care for the girl he loved.

"Well, there's nothing to do but go and be myself," Ellen advised herself.

It was a pleasant trip to the old village where Mr. Oakes had made his home, and Ellen, in spite of a bit of fear that broke through her happiness, enjoyed the journey.

When, hours later and a little weary, she came to the house set back far from the village street, it did look a bit dark and forbidding.

"Joyous place, isn't it? While mother was alive she made him have it painted, but now—nothing doing!" Bob said.

When they reached the door, it opened, and Ellen caught her breath, for the gray-headed man who appeared in it was bigger than Bob, and she had often felt that Bob was big enough.

"Well, here you are! Come in!" Mr. Oakes said shortly in a heavy voice.

Bob introduced her, and she looked far up into cold, commanding eyes in which there was no light of cordiality. Ellen shivered inside.

Then a quaint, kindly old lady advanced, and Ellen met "Ma" Burton as Bob called her.

Then began a series of discoveries for Ellen. The house was in fearful shape—dusty in every corner; and the supper that night was ill-prepared.

"Well, can you stand it?" Bob asked her later, when he had lured her out into the quiet village for a stroll.

"I am not afraid of your father, but what a looking house!"

He chuckled. "Right, but 'Ma' is easy-going. It didn't look that way when mother was alive. He's growing old, you know, and—well, maybe something went out of him when mother died."

"Mrs. Burton told me while we were gossiping that one of her sisters was very ill. Can't you arrange it so she can get away and give me a chance at that house?"

He drew a long breath, his quick mind sensing her plan. "She'll go if I have to abduct her!"

How Bob worked it Ellen did not know, but the next day, not without some misgivings, she took charge. Bob enticed his father away to visit some distant property belonging to him, and Ellen "pitched in."

It was dusk before Bob and his father returned, but by that time she had the principal rooms in shape and supper prepared—with a bountiful supply of griddle-cakes which "Ma" had said Mr. Oakes loved but which she did not have the knack of making to suit him.

She heard them in the living room, then some one went into the library, then into the den on what was, she imagined, a tour of inspection.

"Pooh! Why be so nervous?" she warned herself. "If it doesn't seem like home to him, it does to me; and the old house needed it."

When she called them to supper, Mr. Oakes entered first, his strong old face showing no emotion and Bob, behind her, looked anxious though he winked at her.

When the griddle-cakes appeared, Mr. Oakes eyed them sourly as if with memories of griddle-cakes of the past. He tried one doubtfully, then another, and the scowl went—as did the cakes.

The climax came so quickly it took Ellen's breath. Mr. Oakes lifted his gray head, and he was smiling. "Now, you young fellow, let's talk things over. When are you going to be married?"

Lava Hottest Product of Nature

The hottest product of nature is lava. From ejected from a volcano or a fissure of the earth's surface, its temperature is estimated to be between 2,200 and 3,000 degrees F. This molten rock is sometimes so hot, observes a writer in Collier's Weekly, after cooling for a year, that a steak can be fried on it.

How Casein Is Made

Casein comprises about 3 per cent of skim milk. It is extracted by curdling the milk and washing the curds to remove salts and sugar. The residue is pressed to force the water out, is dried and then ground to what looks like creamy white bread crumbs.

Repeal Celebrates Its Fifth Birthday But Nation Still Suffers a Hangover

Heavy Liquor Consumption
Nets U. S. Coffers
3 Billion Dollars

By JOSEPH W. LaBINE

Five years ago, on December 5, 1933, America pulled the cork out of prohibition to the strains of "Happy Days Are Here Again."

This year's anniversary finds liquor consumption leveling off for the first time in a half-decade that has brought the federal government almost three billion dollars in alcohol taxes.

During the 1936-37 fiscal year alone, some $2,900,000,000 worth of the cup that cheers lubricated America's collective tonsils. This was $300,000,000 more than we spent for education the same year.

Poured out equally for every man, woman, child and infant in the nation, last year's per capita consumption of alcoholic beverages would be something like the following:

- One and a half pints of light wine.
- Four gin cocktails.
- Four Scotch highballs.
- Three pints of sherry.
- Two and a quarter quarts of Bourbon, rye or corn whisky.
- Fourteen gallons of beer or ale.

A lot of us didn't drink our share, but somebody drank it for us, which accounts for the growing alcoholism problem now facing the nation. On one side of the repeal picture is the scene of men brought back to work in a thousand industries inspired by the consumption of liquor. This scene also shows an annual income for the United States treasury of some $600,000,000 a year from liquor taxes, approximately as much as the entire nation pays in personal income levies.

Enter the Female Barfly.

On the other hand are indisputable statistics connecting liquor with automobile accidents, crime and immorality. And not the least of these woes is the feminine barfly, whose birth is chronicled by the Keeley institute of Dwight, Ill.

Mr. Martin Nelson, secretary of the institute, points out that while total patients increased 45 per cent during the first 10 months of 1933, as compared with the similar period in 1932, women patients have shown a gain of 150 per cent during the same period.

"It is undoubtedly true that an increasing number of women have become habitual drinkers in recent years," Mr. Nelson comments. "Prohibition removed drinking from the bar room to the living room, where wives learned to tattle. Repeal returned drinking to the saloon and wives followed their husbands there. Today public complacency about women drinking openly at bars is making the problem of the female inebriate a tragically serious one."

ABOVE—Whereas almost all pre-prohibition drinking was confined to the saloon, much post-prohibition drinking takes place in the home. Liquor stores like this do a big business. RIGHT—Andrew J. Volstead, Minnesota congressman whose prohibition amendment to the Constitution made America a theoretically dry nation.

The Keeley institute treated more patients of all classes in 1936 and 1937 than at any time in the previous years. But Mr. Nelson does not place all responsibility for this condition on the open saloon or the ease with which liquor may be bought at retail stores. "We feel," he reports, "that the country's improved financial condition is also responsible. Our experience over nearly 60 years, including four major depressions and recoveries, has shown that in time of prosperity the number of patients increases. During depressions it declines."

Drys Are Still Strong.

This would indicate the problem is getting worse, despite a leveling off in liquor consumption this year. With business definitely on the upswing, taverns and retail stores are destined for greater patronage. But this increase will come in metropolitan centers, not in the small towns. It is significant that the United States can still boast a strong dry faction whose grass roots are in rural areas, with special emphasis on the Midwest and South.

Temperance forces have grown stronger since repeal. In that year state referendums showed 30 per cent of us were dry. A 1936 private survey raised this figure to 33 per cent and last spring it stood at 34. This looks like a steadily growing sentiment, but it is counteracted by consumption figures, also by the steady decrease of dry states. Today there are but four commonwealths refusing to legalize liquor.

Fundamentally, the Eighteenth amendment was repealed because (1) bootlegging had developed into a horrifying crime menace, and (2) since people appeared determined to drink, it seemed feasible to legalize liquor and put men back to work, also adding materially to tax revenue.

Bootleggers Still Busy.

If repeal has succeeded in the latter respect by netting federal, state and local coffers several billion dollars, it has not wiped out bootlegging. Else "revenooers" in South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama and Florida would not be wrecking some 350 stills each month, nor would 56 men have been indicted in New York last December 21 on a charge of defrauding the government of $1,800,000 in liquor taxes. If anything, legalized liquor has minimized the difficulties of engaging in illicit liquor trade, despite everything state and federal agents can do.

But bootlegged liquor is cheap liquor, and this year aged whisky stocks were so increased that prices could be lowered. If men must have alcohol, they can now get it from legitimate dealers for about the same price a bootlegger charges.

Distillers are not completely blind to the evils of repeal; in fact many of them boast a "social responsibility" for urging temperance.

Too often the guilt lies with local law enforcement officers and the tavern keepers. At Chicago a group of educators surveyed 3,028 taverns and found one or more laws being violated in 2,122 of them. Most were improperly lighted, many sold liquor to intoxicated persons or minors, others remained open after closing hours.

Psychologists point out that under strict law enforcement our per capita liquor consumption will show a steady decline through the years as men and women learn how to "drink intelligently." Perhaps the 1938 leveling off is a turning point, but after five years of repeal John Barleycorn is still giving America a headache—and too many hangovers.

WHAT to EAT and WHY

C. Houston Goudiss Describes Some of the Functions of Vitamin B₁—Reports Recent Discoveries of Its Relation to the Gastro-Intestinal Tract

By C. HOUSTON GOUDISS

PERHAPS no more dramatic chapter has ever been written in the history of nutritional science than the discovery of the chemical structure of the vitamin now known as B₁ and its artificial synthesis.

Inasmuch as a deficiency of this vitamin may have extremely far-reaching effects upon human health and happiness, it is important that every homemaker should learn something of its functions, its characteristics and its sources.

The Anti-Neuritic Substance

Vitamin B₁ is known to prevent and to cure a nerve disease called beriberi.

The disease was known in ancient times in the Orient. It occurred in other countries during the Nineteenth century. And even in the Twentieth century, some of the British troops stationed in Mesopotamia and the Dardanelles during the World war came down with the disease.

Even before this vitamin was identified, a European investigator was seeking to determine why a small portion of milk added to a diet containing protein, fats, carbohydrates and minerals successfully nourished individuals who did not enjoy good health when the milk was omitted.

Chemical Identification

Many investigators sought for years to fathom the secret of this mysterious substance.

After long research by many distinguished investigators, two Americans reached a milestone in the history of nutritional science when they discovered the chemical structure of vitamin B₁ and learned how to synthesize it.

A Regulator of Body Processes In the course of their work with vitamin B₁, nutritional scientists have discovered many other important functions of this vitamin.

It has been determined that this substance is essential to growth and that it is also necessary to promote normal appetite. Laboratory experiments with animals revealed that when fed upon a diet lacking vitamin B₁, the animals lost their desire for food and refused to eat until the vitamin was restored to their diet.

There is also some evidence that vitamin B₁ is necessary for the maintenance of normal muscular tone of the large intestine.

Aids Gastro-Intestinal Tract

Chemical studies on 75 patients led one investigator to conclude that a continual slight shortage of vitamin B₁ leads to definite changes in the motor and secretory mechanism of the gastro-intestinal tract.

There is also evidence that the vitamin B₁ requirement increases with the rate of growth and with increased energy expenditure.

For this reason, active working men and women should be amply supplied with this vitamin, and growing children should also have generous quantities.

Further investigations are now in progress and it is quite possible that many significant new facts will be unearthed in the near future.

In the meantime, there is enough evidence to warrant the belief that the absence of vitamin B₁ results in cellular alteration in the nervous system, intestine, pancreas, stomach, salivary glands, liver and other tissues.

The whole power of the body to resist infection appears to be decreased. This is especially true in the gastro-intestinal tract, probably owing to the action of the bacteria on its passage through the impaired alimentary tract.

Some Peculiarities of This Vitamin

Vitamin B₁ is soluble in water. For this reason, a large percentage of it may be lost if the water in which a food is soaked or cooked is discarded. Other ways in which this precious vitamin is lost are through refining cereals too highly, or when the natural acidity of a food is lowered by the addition of an alkali.

Preventing Vitamin B₁ Deficiency

It has been suggested that the health department of every village, town and city should not be content with protecting the local community against infectious diseases, but should be equally militant in endeavoring to safeguard its people against the dietary deficiency diseases which have been discovered through the recent advances in nutritional knowledge.

That is because many people who can easily afford the foods that furnish vitamin B₁ are consuming a diet deficient in this respect. This unfortunate situation may arise because they believe that their customary diet is adequate. Or, they conclude that appetite is a reliable guide to the meals that should be consumed.

Sources of Vitamin B₁

Investigation has established that foods yielding a good amount of vitamin B₁ include bran, milk, eggs, bananas, orange juice, carrots, spinach and cabbage.

One of America's outstanding nutritional scientists has stated that foods can be made to provide the necessary daily requirement of vitamin B₁ if half of the needed calories are taken in the form of fruits, vegetables, milk and eggs, and if at least half of the breads and cereals consumed are taken in the whole grain form. This suggests the advisability of adding some bran to muffins, waffles, and other quick breads when they are intended for the dietary of normal individuals. The same procedure can likewise be followed in serving hot or cold cereals.

Another distinguished authority holds that adequate amounts of vitamin B₁ can be furnished at a low cost if the homemaker will utilize larger quantities of the whole grain cereals and legumes. If the calories supplied by these foods are not desired—as when one is endeavoring to avoid gaining weight—vitamin B₁ may be obtained from suitable quantities of bran and the germ of the grain.

Foods That Help Promote Regularity

In addition to providing vitamin B₁, which helps to serve as a sort of intestinal tonic, bran and many fruits and vegetables help to add cellulose or bulk to the diet. Their fibrous framework is a great aid in promoting regular health habits.

Some foods are richer than others in cellulose or bulk. Good sources of this substance being notably bran, whole grain cereals, most raw fruits; dried fruits, such as prunes, figs and raisins; raw vegetables; such cooked vegetables as onions and leafy greens; and legumes, that is, dried beans and peas.

These foods, therefore, have a definite place in the diet of normal individuals. The homemaker should see to it that they are included regularly in her daily menus.

If that task is performed faithfully, it should help to develop a healthier and more vigorous race.

Questions Answered

Mrs. S. T. L.—Yes, you are correct. All kinds of flesh food furnish protein, and usually they also contain fat. The amount of fat, however, varies with the cut and with the kind of animal from which it was obtained. Many flesh foods have more fat than full cream.

Mrs. T. A.—If a year-old infant receives a quart of milk daily, he should obtain sufficient protein, calcium, phosphorus and vitamin A to meet his requirements. He will likewise receive substantial amounts of vitamins B and G, but he needs a supplementary source of vitamin C.

A DAY IN THE LIFE OF ZIGGY

"Ziggy is my name, and I'm supposed to be the boss of Orchestra Leader Frankie Masters' household. He looked pretty swell when I picked him out, but now it turns out he plays all night and rehearses all day. So what does that make me? Watch dog, I guess—just watching for the boss. But I'll fix him. Look, boss, you're being picketed—I've got a bone to pick with you."

"I've got a reason to complain. There's no fun in this life. Of course, I have plenty of leisure, but you're never around to play ball or go for a walk, so what do I do? Well, maybe I can find a good book..."

"Here's an idea... I'll try my hand at making musical arrangements for your orchestra. This is a doggy little tune I call 'Bark to the Farm.' And that's where I might just as well go myself."

"What? Mr. Masters staying home tonight? Well, why didn't you say so before? Sore? Of course not. I think you're swell, but if I may give other dogs a word of warning—stay away from orchestra leaders!"

TINLEY PARK UNIT 615
AMERICAN LEG. AUX.

The business meeting of Tinley Park Unit 615 was held Friday, November 25th at the home of Mrs. Frances Rowden. Because of the holidays only one meeting will be held in December, so take note girls, our next meeting date and place is Friday, December 16th, 1938, at Amanda Brandau's home. This is to be our business meeting of the month, and all Chairmen are requested to have their monthly reports ready for this meeting.

The Juniors of Auxiliary met at the home of Martha Grace and Louise Richards Saturday, November 19th, to hold their regular meeting and sex on carpet rags. Twenty-two Thanksgiving tray favors were made for Manteno hospital. They will hold their next meeting at Myrtle Ellen Wolf's home Saturday, December 17th. Come out Juniors, you miss a treat every time you stay away.

The American Legion of Tinley Park Unit 615 wishes to thank all businessmen who assisted in making our Annual Public Card and Bunco Party such a huge success. If it were not for their cooperation many needy veterans or their dependents would have been deprived of the joys of life in clothing, food and educational facilities. Practically every firm and many individuals in Tinley Park assisted in this enterprise, as well as many from Blue Island, Roseland and Chicago Heights.

(Signed) ROSE DYKSTRA, Ways and Means Committee.
